GOVERNMENT WILL FREE $500 MONTHLY OF GERMAN FUNDS

To Be Used for Personal Living Expenses of Official German Representatives

PROMISE MUST BE MADE

It Must Be Agreed That Money Will Be Used Only For Expenses

By Kingsbury Smith
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, June 28—(INS)—The United States Government today notified the German Embassy that it is willing to release $500 per month of frozen Nazi funds for the personal living expenses of each official German representative in this country.

This offer represents the first break in the financial deadlock that has existed in German-American relations since both countries froze one another's funds.

The American offer is conditional upon a German Embassy promise that the $500 released to each Nazi representative in this country will be used only for personal living expenses.

The State Department, in a note delivered to German charge d'affaires Hans Thomsen, also offered to make available additional sums in individual cases where it is shown that such money is needed for legitimate personal needs, such as travelling expenses.

Assurances also have been given the German Embassy that this government is willing to convert into Reichsmarks the personal dollar accounts of the German consuls and other Nazi representatives ordered withdrawn from this country by July 15th.

In order to facilitate the execution of this arrangement, the State Department has requested the German Embassy to furnish a list of all official and personal German financial accounts in this country.

It is anticipated that the German Government will grant a reciprocal financial arrangement for American

SAYS EXPERIMENTS HAVE TAKEN OVER GOVERNMENT

Rev. W. B. Lower Tells Doylestown Clubs "Side Shows Replaced Circus"

NEED OF OPTIMISM

DOYLESTOWN, June 28—In considering how "experiments have taken over the government," the Rev. William Barnes Lower, of the Holy Trinity Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, in an address here, likened it to the "side shows having taken over the circus."

The Rev. Lower, who for 15 years has been chaplain of Lulu Temple, was the speaker before members of the Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs, at the Doylestown Inn this week.

The clergyman, who later in the evening, addressed the 1941 Doylestown high graduating class at the court house, said that it was his teacher, the late President Woodrow Wilson at Princeton University, who made the statement about the side shows taking over the circus.

"The same is true today, and even more so," the Rev. Lower declared. "Government and administration are nothing but experimental things today; in other words the experiments in government have taken over the real government administration."

"Someone recently said that here in America we are developing the automobile faster than the driver. That seems to be the case."

Sellersville Man Is The Victim of Strange Attack

SELLERSVILLE, June 28—Struck down as he walked across the lawn of his home here, Wednesday evening, Fred Schultz is under the care of a physician.

The victim of the attack has a severe concussion of the brain, and laceration over the right eye.

Schultz was in a semi-conscious condition when picked up by Chief Frank Hallman, of the local police department, who was investigating a report of "moans coming from the cemetery."

Apparently two telephone calls received during the evening had no connection, but about 11 o'clock Chief Hallman received a call that a prowler had been seen near the barn on the Ketterer farm, Diamond street, south of the borough line.

Chief Hallman went to the scene, and while at the Ketterer place, received a second call. This time he was told that the sound of moaning could be heard in the cemetery of St. Agnes' Catholic Church. The cemetery is at the rear of the church, on North Main street.

Chief Hallman made a rush trip to the cemetery, and soon traced the moaning to the rear of the Schultz home, a few doors away from the church.

He found Schultz lying in the back yard, a short distance from the garage. Indications were that Schultz had come home late and had placed his car in the garage. He must have gone only a few steps toward the house when he was struck down.

Schultz was able to say he had been hit by someone who jumped from behind a bush. He could give no further details.

He had not been robbed, and apparently no effort had been made to take his car keys. Chief Hallman is of the opinion that a blackjack was used in knocking him out.

Burlington Firemen Can't Take Truck To Parade

BURLINGTON, N. J., June 28—Burlington fire apparatus has been forbidden to go to a North Jersey firemen's parade and convention today.

Common Council's fire committee had a resolution passed 6-4 Tuesday night rescinding the permission given to Young America Fire Company to have its members take the company aerial truck to Cliffside Park where the New Jersey State Exempt Firemen's Association is holding a major event.

Councilman Robert Fox, saying "this is the first time this has ever happened," asked for the reason for the rescinding action, and was told by ex-Chief Gillette, of Hope, a member of the fire committee, that it was felt the aerial truck, the only piece of apparatus of its kind here, should "not be so far away, especially at the present time."

SOLICITING FUNDS TO FINANCE WORK OF DEFENSE COUNCIL

Co. Commissioners Unable To Legally Appropriate Money For Expenses This Year

ASK PUBLIC'S AID

Thomas Scott Represents This Area On The Committee

A committee to raise finances for the Bucks County Defense Council is making an appeal to residents of the county, soliciting contributions towards the expenses of the Defense Council which was recently organized. This committee, designated as the finance committee, is composed of a number of well-known residents of Bucks County. It includes: Thomas Ross, chairman, Doylestown; Mrs. Dorsey Richardson, vice-chairman, New Hope; J. Purdy Weiss, treasurer, Doylestown. Other members of the finance committee are: Dr. Raymond A. Acuff, Langhorne; Mrs. Samuel L. Althouse, Sellersville; Edward R. Barnsley, Newtown; Oscar O. Bean, Doylestown; William Burgess, Jr., Morrisville; Mrs. Henry Chapin, New Hope; Samuel F. Cressman, Quakertown; William L. Leator, Riegelsville; Guy R. Leedom, Southampton; W. Elmer Savacool, Perkasie; and Thomas Scott, Bristol.

The appeal mailed today to residents of Bristol Borough, Bristol Township, Bensalem Township, and Tullytown Borough, is over the signature of Thomas Scott, a well-known resident of Bristol, and cashier of the Farmers National Bank of Bucks County. The letter reads:

"Dear Friend:
"During the last three or four months a number of persons in Bucks County, men and women, interested in protecting all of its citizens in time of emergency, including health, fire protection, lines of communication, property, protection against subversive activities, refugee feeding, housing, etc., laid the ground work for a national organization, which resulted in the appointment by the county commissioners of Bucks County, of The Local Defense Council of Bucks County.

"This council is a non-partisan body, representative of many activities and sections, whose members serve without compensation as a civic duty, and the sole objective of the council is the safety and health of the county, co-operating with other organizations of like or similar nature, so that the resources of the county as a whole will be mobilized and usable in a defense emergency.

"This council is the recognized, official organization in the county, through which all matters dealing in any way with defense may be cleared.

"Until the county commissioners can make a legal appropriation for the running expenses of the defense council, such expenses, for the balance of the year, will have to be provided for by private subscription, through a finance committee, of which the undersigned is a member, and each member of the finance committee has been delegated to solicit contributions from those citizens in his or her immediate community, who wish to assist in the temporary support in the essential work for which the defense council has been made responsible. This committee is confident that it will receive the full co-operation of all to whom this communication is addressed.

"Checks should be made to the order of J. Purdy Weiss, treasurer, and mailed to the undersigned.

"Yours truly,

"THOMAS SCOTT."

The budget for the county had been completed for the current year prior to the passage of the Act of the Legislature establishing the State and Local Defense Councils, and the appointment of the Bucks County Council by the County Commissioners. Consequently it is necessary for the Finance Committee to raise money for the routine running expenses of the Council for the present by private subscription.

ANNIVERSARY

Just four years ago Japanese troops on the outskirts of Peiping, clashed with Chinese soldiers in what was at the time considered as one more of those interminable border incidents that so consistently distinguished relations between the two armies. Subsequent events were to prove that its status was not so simple and so harmless. The incident was to be seized upon eagerly by Japan as the meager justification it required for the initiation of a vast enterprise of conquest whose ultimate objective was to be the domination of the Asiatic mainland.

Although the truth with respect to the situation in China is seriously obscured by the restrictions of censorship and the smokescreen of propaganda, there are certain realities that hardly can be kept from public knowledge. Japan had expected to bring China to its knees in six months, but today, after four years of fighting, complete victory still seems to be impossible of attainment. There are other results that are incontrovertible.

The war in China, like that in Europe, has brought the world to new depths of barbarism. There is no longer the traditional distinction between combatants and non-combatants in warfare. Men in uniform, women and children, hospitals, orphanages, cities are all legitimate prey to the flyer with a load of bombs to dispose of before his return to his base. And the horrors of seige—death, destruction and starvation—have become familiar to all.

It is estimated that in the four years of war in China, more than 5,000,000 persons have lost their lives. Japan is reported to be in at least nominal possession of 600,000 miles of territory, including most of China's large cities. The drain upon economic resources and the limited material supplies at home has, of course, been enormous, and has caused extreme sacrifices by the Japanese people.

And the end, when it comes, may be something far different from fulfillment of the bright dream of conquest that animates the minds of the Japanese war lords.

HEAT WAVE

These occasional heat spells, when the sun gleams down mercilessly upon the just and the unjust and humanity generally is reduced to a sweltering mass, are not without their compensations. In fact, they often eventuate in experiences of genuine delight.

What could be more thrilling, as an example, than the relief that comes with the brilliant and the spectacular panoply of the storm, the rush of cool breezes that drive the heavy, oppressive, fevered air to retreat and leave behind a bright and pleasantly refreshing day.

Furthermore, the heat wave has served an important practical purpose. It has prepared—conditioned is the new term—humanity, at least psychologically, for whatever the reminder of the summer may have to offer, so that the populace will be able to accept understandingly and uncomplainingly any excursions the thermometer may make into the realm of the nineties.

With women now controlling 75 per cent of the nation's spending and Uncle Samuel taking 25 per cent in taxes, things are even worse than most men had suspected.

CHAPTER THIRTY-ONE

The door shook with the weight of shoulders driven against it. Tony sprang back. His advantage was lost. The panel nearest the door-knob cracked, though the framework of the door stood firm. But if they crashed in a panel, they could reach the bolt.

Tony piled the leather chairs and the table against the door. Then, gripping the bronze lamp, he ran back to the office, snatching the black cover off the couch as he dashed by. A last wild idea was shaping in his mind. There was a bolt on his side of the office door. He shot it. And now indeed he was locked in for his last stand.

There was the noise of splintering wood in the room he had just left. Tony hastily examined the windows again. They were too narrow for his six feet and broad shoulders to get through. They were locked from inside, and apparently hadn't been opened since Northem took possession of the suite. Tony struggled with the stiff lock of a window on the port side. It yielded only a little.

He laid the cover, he had brought with him, on the floor. Into it, he shoved all the incriminating papers he had managed to collect. Disregarding the banging on the office door, he broke the lock of the Dictaphone case. There were three cylinders in it which had been used. These he wrapped and laid among the papers. That ivory handled seal on the table must go, too. . . . the key of Northem's code probably engraved on it!

"Nothing will happen to you, Mr. Worth, if you let us in." That was Fritz.

"Yeah?" Tony sneered. He knotted the four corners of the cover and lowered the bundle out of the window. It dropped noiselessly on the port deck. Well, he had done all he could. Perhaps, before they got him, he could make such a row that harbor police would come aboard. He didn't want it that way. But he wasn't in a position to alter events.

Silence reigned in the other room. Tony faced the door. He heard a groan.

They were torturing Captain Buckner.

Tony, with his only weapon, the bronze lamp, catapulted into the room. The figures there were blurs that spread, circled, leaped for him. But his blazing gray eyes saw only Captain Buckner, erect in his crumpled blue serge, the collar torn open, his throat bleeding from thin cuts. Hans held the knife, poised over the jugular vein. The other seaman piloned the old man's arms to his sides.

Tony flung the lamp at Hans. It struck him full on the forehead. He reeled back with a howl of pain. The knife fell.

Captain Buckner, free of that menace, pushed his wry old body against the man who held him. They fell, tangled on the floor, the captain upmost, gouging at the man's eyes with one free hand.

Fritz bent low and rushed, catching at Tony's knees to trip him. Tony lashed up his right knee, clipped Fritz under the chin, sent him backward. But Hoto advanced in a wrestling crouch. Tony whirled, to avoid the Jiu Jitsu grips. He might not be able to cope with this time.

Then both Hans and Fritz, their balance recovered, lunged forward. Tony glanced at Captain Buckner in the interval of a breath. The old sea dog's color was ghastly but he was on his feet, his fists flailing at Fritz. The man who had been on the floor, was up and up, aiming below the captain's belt. To defend himself, Captain Buckner had to kick back without benefit of rules.

The Japanese waved Fritz aside, and closed in on Tony, ready for a kill. As Fritz bent for the knife gleaming beyond him on the black rug, Tony moved. Whirling he caught Fritz by the shoulder and flung him in Hoto's path. The two sea dogs could "Tchik, as human misbehind, his grin drawing his lips back in a snarl.

Tony dodged him again. Captain Buckner had the knife, and Fritz lay where Tony had hurled him. Hoto edged around Tony; reached him. His wicked lightning-like hands were raised to chop down on Tony's ears. The muscles at the heels of his palms were coiled like springs.

Tony knew that blow. The hands would jar against his ears. It meant concussion of the brain.

Tony lowered his head, and slid forward. Then he heard the shot from outside. It was dull, like a slap on wood. He was conscious that Hoto was coming back at him. Footsteps rapped against the deck.

Had Friedrich Haensel and Sergei Vorodkin, walking back to their hotel, been less absorbed in their mutual animosity, and their equally mutual distrust in Northem's promises, the dry crack of a shot over the harbor might have stopped their stroll. The shot seemed to come from the yacht of the girl whose millions were to aid their "cause." But no stroller on the Croisette paid any attention to the sound. . . . no one, that is, except big Eric Thelme. His conscience bothered him. He had kept thinking of how he had left Tony. And now this shot. . . . Eric didn't like it. He hired a small craft and made for the Serena.

When he was halfway to the yacht, he saw two men running down from the boat deck. Eric stood up and waved to them. They saw him; paused.

Meanwhile, the shot outside paralyzed the desperate men fighting in Northem's suite. The clatter of footsteps added to the panic of the two seamen and Fritz. As Tony had warned them, mutiny and treason carried ugly penalties.

Now the noise they heard could only mean that Captain Buckner's two officers had escaped from the chartroom and that Mitzel, losing his nerve, had fired. They would have the harbor authorities after them in no time.

They listened. Then the steps abruptly faded into a silence more terrifying than the pound of feet on deck.

The room was heavy with breathing, violence temporarily suspended. The mirrors Tony had smashed gave back chipped reflections of faces distorted by fear. Hoto stood motionless, his dark kimono a blot against aluminum walls. Captain Buckner, his mutilated throat bleeding, held the knife he had struggled for. Fierce, indomitable, he straddled the red carnations Tony had thrown to the rug.

Tony backed to the splintered door, giving onto the lobby. The footsteps died away; hope with them. He looked bleakly across the room into Northem's office. He saw there the broken cabinet, the Dictaphone case, the overturned table.

Hoto circled, his horn-rimmed glasses riding above his Oriental grin. Suddenly he struck. When the agile Japanese crossed his arms like shears and gripped the sides of Worth's open shirt collar, his fingers drew in, twisting and tightening the linen with a stranglehold that cut off Tony's breath. At the same time, Hoto's nimble foot behind Tony's jerked forward for a throw. "Great pleasure, Mr. Worth!" he gasped.

Once more, feet drummed along the main deck. Over their running tread, Eric's voice bellowed, "Tony are you there?"

Tony yelled, "Here! Here! Quick!" Eric charged like a bull through the deck door into the lobby, Middleton and Swan after him.

Hoto seemed to dissolve in the shadow behind Tony, who cried, "Catch him!"

The Jap was trying to slip by the three men, crowding into the room. Aggravatively big Eric Thelme backed away. He would have attacked any number of thugs, but the high color drained from his face at the mere idea of pitting himself against such a deadly wrestler.

Middleton and Swan didn't feel that way. They lunged at the eel-like Oriental, pinioning him between them, his small swift hands and feet helpless for once. They were wild, after the ignominy of being trussed up in the chartroom.

If the chief engineer hadn't left them, to get himself a swig of rum, Swan couldn't have used his teeth to loosen the cords around Middleton's wrists. When Mitzel, warm with rum, returned, his prisoners were free. Mitzel's one shot went wild. Middleton got the gun and Mitzel, a broken jaw.

"My fault, old chap," Eric mumbled humbly to Tony. "Felix said if I didn't put you out for a few hours, he'd turn you over to Hoto."

"Forget it!" Tony said, and seized Eric's arm. "What have they done with Marie?"

Eric lowered his head. "Marie?" he repeated heavily; the purple veins swelled along his cheeks as he concentrated. "Gad! I think I know where she is!" he exclaimed. "Northem and Lippi motored off about half an hour ago. Theresa Lascar's got a villa, a twenty minutes' drive from Cannes. She must be there."

Suddenly Fritz collapsed, whimpering in terror. "You can't keep us here—we'll all be blown up. Ask Hoto. They've planted a time-bomb in the boiler room." His sallow face twisted. "I don't know when the thing's to go off. None of us expected to be on board after four, and it must be that now."

Captain Buckner glared at the trembling men. "You know where that bomb is, Hoto. Talk quick! Here, Middleton, give me that gun."

The Japanese shrugged and smiled.

Fritz shivered. "Life don't mean anything to him."

"Search the boiler room," Captain Buckner ordered his officers. "None of us leaves this ship till she's safe."

"I must leave!" Tony cried. "Northem's after Miss Schuyler." The Captain's weather-beaten face went almost white, lines assuring his hard cheeks. "Well, what are you waiting for?" he snapped. Their eyes were off Hoto for a split second. He streaked by. The deck door opened and slammed.

"Watch the others!" Tony shouted. He snatched the gun from Buckner and tore after the Jap. But he was too late.

Hoto, poised on the rail, jumped. He swam toward the Aquila, lying nearby, her wings silvery on the glimmering blue of the harbor. Tony fired but missed. The pilot of the hydroplane, prepared for trouble, started the motors. The Jap kept swimming under water. Tony was a good shot, but he was afraid he might hit the boats now heading for the Serena. Other craft were taking off from shore.

Hoto gained the hydroplane. It skated on the smooth waters; zoomed upwards.

Tony raced back into the room. Middleton and Swan had returned. They had found a highly perfected time-bomb.

The flight of Northem's hydroplane filled Tony with further dread for Marie. "It's a race now," he shouted at Captain Buckner. "The Jap will land and warn Northem we're in possession of his papers."

"Let's be off, m'lady!" Eric boomed. "Take the boat I came in."

Tony paused a moment at the door. "There's a bundle of important papers on the port deck, under the office windows," he told Captain Buckner. "Hold everything until you hear from me."

"Right, son!" Buckner's voice carried, as Tony and Eric Thelme ran for the deck ladder and down it.

Boats were converging now upon the Serena. "The fat's in the fire," Tony murmured, his gray eyes bitter. "If you're wrong, Thelme—if we don't find Marie—"

"I swear I'm with you, old man. We'll come out on top."

"Or at the bottom of the bone heap," Tony said. "Can't you go faster?"

Make Your Own Tea Rings

By Frances Lee Barton

IF you make a filled tea ring from the following recipe you will have something to be proud of.

Yes! It takes a little time, but it settles the "what to serve" problem and thus takes a real load off your mind as well.

Pineapple Filled Tea Ring

2 cups sifted cake flour; 2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder; ½ teaspoon salt; 4 tablespoons butter or other shortening; 1 egg, slightly beaten; 10 tablespoons heavy cream; pineapple filling.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening. Combine egg and cream; add all at once to flour mixture and stir until all flour is dampened. Then stir vigorously until mixture forms a soft dough and follows spoon around bowl.

Turn out on slightly floured board and knead 30 seconds. Roll into oblong sheet, 7 x 10 inches. Spread evenly with pineapple filling. Roll as for jelly roll, wetting edges to seal. Cut in ten 1-inch slices.

Pinch each slice at sealed edge into rounding point. Place a 3-inch cookie cutter in center of grease-baking sheet. Arrange slices in circle around cutter, leaving points touch cutter. Pat lightly to shape.

Bake in hot oven (425° F.) 25 minutes, or until done. Remove to cake rack and while hot spread with glaze made by combining ½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar, 4 teaspoons pineapple juice and ½ teaspoon lemon juice. Serve warm or cold.

To make pineapple filling, combine 1 tablespoon sugar, 2 tablespoons cake flour, and dash of salt in top of double boiler. Add gradually ½ cup canned pineapple juice, mixing thoroughly. Add ½ cup well drained canned crushed pineapple. Place over boiling water and cook 8 minutes, stirring constantly. Combine 1 egg yolk, slightly beaten, and 2 teaspoons lemon juice. Add to pineapple mixture and continue cooking 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Chill.

This ring may be stored in refrigerator for 2 hours before baking. Cover closely with waxed paper and damp cheesecloth.

'The Good Fairy' Opens At Bucks Co. Playhouse Monday

With Katherine Locke and Walter Slezak co-starting in the leading roles, Kenyon Nicholson and Theron Bamberger will present Ferenc Molnar's famous comedy hit, "The Good Fairy," at their Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, for the week beginning Monday.

"The Good Fairy" tells a delightful story of the flirtations of a little movie usherette, and how her wiles affect the destinies of a number of people. It will be the first time in the history of the New Hope Theatre that a comedy from the pen of the internationally acclaimed dramatist has been presented, and it will find Miss Locke and Mr. Slezak cast in roles that were played by Helen Hayes and Walter Connolly in the successful Broadway production.

"The Good Fairy" will be directed by Hume Cronyn, the young Canadian who has been starred by George Abbott in such smash farces as "Three Men on a Horse" and "Room Service," and who has played in such dramatic hits as "High Tor" and "Retreat to Pleasure."

Others in the cast will include Grace Coppin, Morton Stevens, Otto Hulet and James Gregory. The play will be presented nightly with popular prices matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

GRAND THEATRE

John Arthur's latest starring assignment, that of Mary Jones in "The Devil and Miss Jones," gives her the crisply modern role of a clerk in a department store in which the employees are secretly engaged in an attempt to organize into a bargaining unit in the hope of forcing the employers to redress their wrongs at the Grand Sunday.

Mary loves her job, but loves more her boy-friend Joe (Robert Cummings), who has recently been discharged as the ringleader of the group attempting the formation of the union. His activities had reached a crisis when employees hung and burned in public an effigy of "the world's richest man," Merrick (Charles Coburn), the actual, but never-seen, owner of the establishment.

Merrick, hitherto unaware that he even owned the store in question—one of his thousands of holdings—is so angered by the fault, which has been duly played up in the papers, that, in order to get out and punish those responsible, he secretly joins the store's sales force, incognito.

Know America's Planes

VULTEE VANGUARD

Fast, heavily-armed fighter planes are being produced in ever-growing numbers by the American aircraft industry to meet the needs of the embattled British and our own air force. Here is a fine example of this type of aircraft—the VulTEE Vanguard interceptor pursuit designated as the P-48. The Pratt & Whitney 1200-horsepower Twin Vasp gives the Vanguard a speed of 350 miles per hour, while six machine guns, two of them .50 caliber weapons, provide heavy fire power. Points of identification include the widely-spaced landing wheels (which are fully retractable), the long, sleek nose and the roomy cockpit housing, providing excellent visibility.

representatives in Germany. A similar arrangement is being considered in connection with Italian representatives in this country, whose funds also are frozen.

Meanwhile, the German Embassy has requested the American Government to obtain assurances from Great Britain that the Nazi consuls and other German nationals ordered withdrawn will receive no harsh treatment from the British enroute home.

Arrangements are being made for the Germans to proceed to Lisbon and the German Embassy wants to prevent any recurrence of the incident that marked the return to Germany of the party of Count Bernstorff, the German ambassador in Washington at the time the United States severed diplomatic relations with the imperial German Government in 1917.

Although the British Government at that time granted safe conduct for Bernstorff's party, it reserved the right to search them.

When the Germans arrived at Halifax aboard the Scandinavian liner Frederik VIII, they were subjected to such a thorough search of their persons and possessions that the German Government lodged a formal diplomatic protest with the United States against the treatment. This Government replied that the protest should have been addressed to Britain rather than the United States.

"Service clubs such as Kiwanis and Rotary should spread the spirit of optimism at all times," the speaker declared. "You have done a great deal of good and right now, with the world at war, you have a distinct place and duty to perform in keeping up the general morale."

Rotarians were welcomed to the meeting by President Nathan J. Gorelick, of the Kiwanis Club. The retiring president of Rotary, Dr. Joseph Kershner, extended greetings to the Kiwanians and assured them that Rotary always looks forward to the annual inter-club meeting on commencement night.

Aid Speeded To Grounded Oil Tanker

Philadelphia, June 28—U. S. Coast Guard headquarters in Philadelphia announced today that the cutter Mohawk from Cape May, N. J., is speeding to the aid of the 18,500-ton oil tanker Robert H. Colley which ran aground on 14-foot-bank in Delaware Bay near Lewes, Del.

The tanker, carrying a crew of 35 and enroute from Port Arthur, Tex., to Philadelphia, appeared to be in no danger of cracking up and apparently suffered no serious damage, salvage company officials said.

Atlantic Refining Company officials said the grounding occurred during a falling tide. Coast Guard patrol boats from Cape May and Lewes were unable to get the vessel off the shoals in initial efforts.

The Robert H. Colley has an overall length of 541 feet, a beam of 70 feet and a top speed of 13 knots an hour. Cargo capacity is 6,552,000 gallons.

Better Prepare For "Seconds"!

By Frances Lee Barton

It is not necessary to labor long, or spend excessively to furnish a dessert dish with a five-point appeal—sight, smell, taste, digestibility and nourishment.

You have whipped cream, gelatin and hot water available. A few sticks of peppermint candy may be secured easily. With these four ingredients and very little effort—you can prepare one of the most delightful little "surprise" desserts imaginable.

You had better make plenty, for the demand for "seconds" will be numerous.

Food Poisoning Blamed For Illness of Picnickers

Muncy, June 28—Tainted food served at a luncheon which preceded a Masonic picnic was believed today to have caused the sudden outbreak of illness which struck down 300 persons yesterday at the estate of former Senator Muncy.

Dr. A. C. Haas, Williamsport, one of the physicians in attendance at the first aid tent on the Sones estate, said he believed food poisoning, the excessive heat and soft drinks and ice cream eaten by the picnickers accounted for the wave of illness which swept through the 5,000 men and women present. The temperature was 85 degrees.

Lending strength to this belief was the disclosure that of the 300 persons stricken, only 12 men and eight women said they had not attended the luncheon in the Williamsport Consistory Cathedral preceding the picnic. Dr. Haas said the 12 men suffered from normal stomach ailments, while the eight women had "sympathy spells." All the others stricken were men.

RAF Drops Tons of Explosives On Power Station

London, June 28—RAF squadrons dropped tons of high explosives today on a power station at Comines near Lille in German occupied France and carried out a new daylight sweep of the invasion coastline.

Authorities in London termed the attack on the power station "successful." It was launched only a few hours after British bombers hammered the great German port of Bremen and

TOUCHING ALL BASES...

With JACK GILL

It was mid-afternoon at Spider's place. Four sharps were playing cards over at the far end of the room. I was waiting for Theodore to make an appearance. I knew something must be up, because Timmy the Toad never hops around much any-more these days.

Finally he sauntered up to the mahogany bar and ordered a root beer. He never hit higher than a bicarbonate. "Friend," quoth he, "something must be done to promote the future of baseball. I don't at all like conditions as they are. Younger ball players must be found and organized into community playground leagues.

"And that's something else," continued Timmy the Toad. "Our town has grown out of the founding stages. Towns throughout the state have well-knit playgrounds sponsored by public funds. Why, even Morrisville has a recreational program.

"But, more than anything else, we must start ball players from the seventh grade on up until they grow old enough to play in the local sandlot league. Baseball is in a sad state. It's an unforgotten falsification to say that they're all in the Army. We've got to fango more flies, or something."

I could see Theodore was well wrought up. In order to change the subject, Slug asked him what he thought of the Com-Louis fiasco. Timmy nearly went all out on Joe before the fight. But he swept it all off with a dignified gesture.

"Outside of Bristol and Doylestown, baseball in the rural sections is dead. That's a long stretch of baseball-less territory. Here are the best proposals we well-versed fans can offer to re-enliven and re-stimulate the game:

"1.—Start community playground leagues with leaders to teach the youngsters the proper fundamentals of batting and fielding. You would be surprised to find the flaws that local youths make innocently. They simply know no better.

"2.—Contact the Atlantic baseball school and organize a group of young boys to be on hand for Ira Thomas and Earl Combs. Other towns are doing it, so we might as well get in on the free lessons.

"3.—Throw the big, round, mushy softball over the backyard fence."

Old Timmy's chest was thumping rhythmically with each beat of his heart by now. The old boy never did like softball. He was the first to claim that it would throw a ball-player's eye, timing, and fast action out of kilter. This latest outburst was so different from Theodore, however, in that it was downright constructive. Usually the old toad merely criticizes outright in slam fashion.

"How well I recall the Boys Week days," croaked Timmy. "At the time we passed the affair on as a mere fragment of youth aid. Today I can now see that it was the injection of our athletic program. Since we dropped it our high school track and baseball has slipped. Get a boy interested in a sport while he's young, pit him against another club or ward, and he'll become rooted to the game. We've got about two good ball players in town coming up. The rest are all veterans in their own right."

With one hop, Timmy evacuated from Spider's bar. A gathering had assembled and all were leaning with their chins in their hands listening attentively. For the Toad has always been respected in the local sports world. Another hop and he was out in the alley.

Nothing makes a selective service man in camp happier than a letter from home or a home-town newspaper in the daily mail, army officials said recently after an extensive survey.

Next in order, the selective service youth likes sweets such as candy, cookies and chocolates—and chewing gum!

Officers say that on the march the gum helps keep the boys from drinking too much water and from dipping into their lunch ration.

Other offerings which bring a smile of pleasure to the enrollee include a general repertoire of utilities among which are books of stamps, flashlights, a towel now and then, toilet articles, and reading materials.

Officers say that if relatives want to be sure their addressee gets what's mailed to him, they should address the letter or package in this way: Name first, his company or battery second, his regiment third, and, lastly the name of the post office.
